Directions: Cut the squares out then glue the squares on the correct side of the T-chart according to the sentence written on it. If it is a fact, you will glue it on the fact side. If it is an opinion, you will glue it on the opinion side.

A government official suggested that one way to raise money was to tax Americans.	When he heard the news, King George felt more like a father than he ever had in his life.
King George was amazed that Americans objected.	On November 25, 1781, the news reached London that the English army had surrendered.
This time the tax was on lead, tea, paint, and a number of items England sold to America.	He even drafted an announcement of his abdication, but then he put it away in his desk.
They hated the whole business so much, especially the English soldiers stationed in their midst.	In 1767 the British Government passed laws to tax American Colonist.
So, just what led to this wasteful tossing of perfectly good tea?	So, just what led to this wasteful tossing of perfectly good tea?
Drinking Tea was a custom that had traveled to the new land.	Groups of men marched down to Griffin's Wharf in disguise.
King George III was certain that the colonist could not hold to their boycotts.	He insisted that the tea be unloaded and the taxes paid.
King George ordered punishment for his disobedient subjects.	He played the flute and harpsichord, hunted, and studied the stars in his private observatory.
